SYNOPSIS

Richard Exon, a poor young Englishman, betrays elderly Matthew Gering, who at his death, gives him a statement claiming he, Gering, is Rudolph Elbert Virgil, Count of Brief, of ancient Austrian nobility who was betrayed 20 years before by his twin brother, Ferdinand, whose sentence for forgery he himself served. Ferdinand appropriated his title, property and daughter. Before he dies, Gering tells Exon there is a family secret, known only to the head of the house, to be found in the great tower at Brief, by a doorway none can ever find. Exon inherits his uncle's fortune and sets out to right Gering's wrongs. En route he encounters Percy Elbert Virgil, son of the villainous Ferdinand and sees him in conference with Inskip, a diamond merchant. He engages a valet, Winter, who hates Percy and meets by chance at a garage. John Herrick, who is a linguist and who as a youth served as a page at Gering's wedding, and had visited Brief. Herrick, due eventually to fall into an inheritance, is at present unemployed and seeking pleasant work to while away a few months. Exon and Herrick establish headquarters at Brenda Revok's farm at Raven, a few miles from Brief and make their plans. They find the castle almost inaccessible at first, but at the mouth of the entrance drive several days later, they see a closed car occupied by Percy Virgil.

We were now approaching the foothills among which the castle stood, but the drive was so serpentine and the trees by its sides were so thick that we could not see what was coming for more than some 50 paces beyond each bend. We, therefore, took the precaution of leaving the road for the bracken before we rounded a curve, to make sure the next reach was empty before we exposed ourselves. That we did so was just as well, for a quarter of a mile further on, I lifted my head from the bracken to see the closed car at rest in the midst of the way. One of its doors was open, and someone within was speaking with Percy Virgil, who seemed to be very angry and was pointing the way we had come.

Be sure I dropped like a stone, and Herrick, moving behind me, followed my lead.

The car then began to move backwards slowly enough.

Now the drive was not wide enough to allow any car to turn round, but a track ran out of the drive some six or seven paces from where we lay. By making use of this track, any chauffeur could turn any car, and I was ready to wager that here the car would be turned. Sure enough, in a moment or two, we saw the body swing backwards into the track. For all that, I should have been wrong, for the car did not stop until it was four or five paces clear of the drive, when the chauffeur applied his hand-brake and switched his engine off. The car had been parked.

As somebody opened a door, Percy Virgil strode out of the drive and into the track.

Here I will say once for all that throughout this tale I shall report in English such speech as was used. Much was, of course, said in German, but though, when I heard it, I did not know what it meant, Herrick translated it for me as soon as ever he could.

As he came to the car—

"Where's the wire?" snapped Virgil. "Or have you forgotten that?"

"It is here," said another man. "And the change of clothes?"

"Also," said a woman's voice. "All marked, as I said?"

"That is so."

"Then follow me," said Virgil, "and bring the wire."

Cautiously raising our heads, we saw the procession set out—first Virgil, then the man, then the woman, with a dog on a lead. The chauffeur brought up the rear. They passed behind the car and disappeared in the wood.

When Herrick explained what had passed, I put a hand to my head.

"What on earth does it mean?"

Herrick shrugged his shoulders.

"Unless," he said, "dear Percy is making a film . . ."

"Which is absurd," said I. "But so is everything else. And where does the dog come in?"

"Nothing comes in," said Herrick. "It's all preposterous. But I'm glad to have seen dear Percy—extremely glad."

Having seen and heard what we had, I was for following Virgil, to see what his business might be, but when I suggested this, Herrick raised his eyebrows and glanced at his watch.

"As you please," said he, "but it's now getting on for five, and the outdoor staff will be up and about by six. If we turn aside and start stalking Percy and Co.—and it means stalking, mark you: not whipping along a road—by the time we get back to our job, we may find that we've missed the tide."

This was sheer common sense, so I said no more.

Ten minutes perhaps had gone by when the drive curled between the foothills and then swung round to the left and began to climb. Almost at once the woods on its right fell away, and there was the castle before us, perhaps 300 yards off.

It made a lovely picture, lit by the rising sun, for its tower and its seven turrets stood out most bold and brilliant against the blue of the sky and these and every projection that caught the light were throwing shadows so vivid that the castle looked heraldic and might have been a blazon of black and gold. It was built of gray stone and must once have been a fortress of considerable strength, but windows had later been set in its massive walls and chimney-stacks had been added to make it a residence.

Herrick, I think, was more excited than I, for, now that he saw the castle as he had seen and known it when he was twelve years old, he began at once to remember the plan of the house: since this was all to the good, I let him be and myself began to survey the heights which we hoped to use.

Almost at once I remarked that on one of these, three firs were standing together to thrust a gray-green steep into the sky: this, I was sure, could be seen from the farther side and so would make us a landmark for future use. The next thing I saw was a path which slanted up from the meadows into the woods, and when I had taken my glasses, I found that it led to an elegant belvedere, or open summer house. This looked unfrequented, and but for my glasses I could not have picked it out, for the trees which had been cut back had put forth new boughs. Because of the veil of foliage, nobody standing

It was nearly six o'clock, and I had been gone from Herrick a full half-hour when the track beside which I was moving came to an end. This to my dismay, for now I had nothing to go on, although, of course, the track might have led me wrong.

In vain I sought for a broken stem of bracken which might declare the trail which my friends had left: in vain I scanned the forest and strained my ears: but for the birds and the squirrels, I might have had the world to myself.

Flat against the trunk of an oak tree, I wiped the sweat from my face. Five paces ahead a ride had been cut through the woods: though this was thick with bracken, it gave me a pretty clear view to right and to left, but the flood stretched smooth and unbroken and I could see no sign of its having been crossed.

Loth to admit defeat, I tried to think what to do. To proceed was easy enough, but, for all I knew, with every step that I took I might be going away from the party I sought. Yet to stay where I was was useless. If only there had been a hillock to add a few feet to my height, I could have looked down upon the bracken and that point of view might have shown me the traces the others had left. But there was no hillock: the ground here-west of the house, and rose, on the right, to a circus, whence three other rides ran out, as spokes from a hub. Across the ride two definite trails had been left—or, rather, one and a half. The first, which stretched right across, was 30 paces away, to the left of the oak; and the second, which stretched but halfway, as far to the left again. At the end of this second trail, full in the midst of the ride, the woman was sitting alone, with her back towards me.

To say that I felt bewildered means nothing at all. What on earth she was doing there, I could not conceive, and at last I made up my mind that she must be hiding from Virgil with whom she had had some fuss. Of him or the other two men, I could see no sign.

Now but for the sight of the woman, I should have at once descended and taken the other trail, but whilst I was still considering whether to follow this course, the woman got to her feet and stood perfectly still.

When I saw her do this, it came to me in a flash that, unless the woman was mad, she must be acting in concert with somebody else. And so she was. Before two minutes had passed, the chauffeur appeared.

He made his way straight to her side, when the woman handed him something and then hurried out of the ride and so out of my view.

Preparing to descend, I had turned about and was standing upon the branch with my hands on the trunk, when the scream of a dog in agony rent the ear. Half-turning again, I saw the chauffeur standing where I had seen him last, holding the dog at arm's length by the scruff of its neck and flogging the luckless creature with all his might.

I was just about to cry out when I heard a galloping horse coming down from the right, that is to say, from the circus from which the four rides ran out.

Because of the leaves before me, I could not see it go by, but an instant later a bay flashed into my view. On his back was a girl, and the two were going full tilt down the midst of the ride, and making straight for the chauffeur still thrashing the dog.

So for a second or less. Then the bay turned head over heels and the girl went flying beyond him, as though shot out of a gun.

I never saw such a fall in all my life, but before I had time to think, much less to descend, a man and a woman were rushing to where the girl lay. They were, of course, the two that came out of the car and they must have been standing directly in line with the bay when he came to the ground. And the chauffeur, too, was running as fast as he could.

The bay was up now and was moving off through the bracken with heaving flanks, but the girl lay crumpled up and perfectly still. To my surprise, instead of attending to her, the man and the woman between them lifted her up and began to stumble with her towards my oak. They passed directly beneath me, seeming to think of nothing but getting their burden along. Had this been the carcass of a dog, they could scarce have used it with less propriety. The girl was dead or senseless—I could not tell which: but, instead of supporting her head, they let this hang, and one of her legs was suffered to trail on the ground.

This was too much for me, and at once I began to go down; but, for all my indignation, I could not make haste, because, as I had feared, the descent was twice as stiff as the climb I had made.

Cautiously Raising Our Heads, We Saw the Procession Set Out.

there could ever be seen from below, yet he could see as much as he wished by peering between the leaves. To reach this spot from above looked easy enough, for it hung a short 30 feet below the crest of the hill and the ground between was covered with beech and fir.

This was enough for me. My one idea was to make for the Rolls and then to go round by road and get to the belvedere as soon as ever I could. But Herrick, deep in memory, would not be moved.

"Why rush your fences?" he said. "We've plenty of time. I'm doing lovely work—I can even remember a picture that hung in the dining-room. That's the dining-room at the end. You can't see the stables from here—they're behind to the left. But what I'm on now is the tower. I think it rises from the courtyard—I'm almost sure. But I know that it had a door on the second floor. The courtyard's beyond that archway—not very big . . . You go on, if you like—I shan't be long."

I had a sudden idea. "All right," I said. "I'll go on. And on the way I'll see what Percy's up to."

"What could be better?" said Herrick. "But don't get involved. We're here to find out—not give battle. Don't forget that."

"I promise," said I. "Don't be long," and, with that, I was gone.

Retracing my steps, I did not use the drive, but moved by its side through the bracken beneath the trees. As I approached the track, I saw that the car was still there and had not been moved.

Now all I knew was that Virgil and his companions had passed up the track out of sight. How far they had gone or whether they had kept to the track, I had no idea, but since it seemed pretty clear that they would not be very far off, from now I took greater precautions against being seen. When I moved, I did so gently and went on my hands and knees, and whenever I rose to look around, I did so against a tree-trunk, as though, indeed, I were stalking some wary prey.

First of all, I took a good look at the car. This was roomy and powerful and something the worse for wear. Its number-plates had been oiled and were coated with dust. One of its doors was ajar, and within I could see an old suitcase, no doubt containing "the clothes." But that was all, and after a long look round, I went on my way.

about was sloping, but nothing more.

Suddenly I thought of the oak tree and lifted my eyes . . .

If I could reach it, there was the place I desired. One of the mighty branches was stretching out over the ride—a branch twice as thick as my loins, some 20 feet up. If I were there, I could see for a quarter of a mile, while the leaves of the lesser boughs would save me from being seen.

After a long look about me, I leaped for a sturdy sucker and swung myself up. My branch was not easy to come to, because what handhold there was was so far between, and I must confess that, whilst I fought my way up, I could not help wondering how I should ever get down. However, I would not turn back, and after two or three minutes I flung a leg over the perch upon which I had set my heart.

I now had a very good view of the whole of the ride, which sloped, on the left, to the meadows south-

Machinery Increases Production of Corn Twentyfold, Agricultural Bureau Reports

Machinery development, which has enabled man to use energy supplied by animals and tractors instead of his own muscles, makes it possible for the individual farmer, who a century ago could grow five acres of corn, to plant, cultivate and harvest 20 times as much today.

Recent investigations by the United States Department of Agriculture in co-operation with the Iowa Experiment station show that the modern farmer expends no more time or labor in producing 5,000 bushels of corn than did the farmer of 100 years ago in producing 250 bushels.

"Primitive cultural methods used by Indians were not a great deal different from those of today," says R. B. Gray, of the bureau of agricultural engineering. "The difference is in the tools that are used."

In 1855, Gray points out, the corn farmer used a walking plow, a single section or "A" harrow, and a shovel plow for marking off rows. He planted by hand, covered the seed with a hoe, cultivated with the same one-horse shovel plow, and harvested by hand. With this equipment he needed 33.6 hours of labor to grow one acre of corn.

Thirty years later the farmer had the two-bottom gang plow, the disk harrow, a two-row planter, a two-section harrow, a single-row cultivator, but still harvested by hand. With this equipment he was able to grow and harvest an acre of corn with 15.1 hours of labor.

With the all-machine age of 1930 the farmer had available a tractor, a two-bottom gang plow, seven-foot tandem disk, four-section harrow and pulverizer, two-row planter, and a two-row picker or harvester. This cut the man-labor hours to 6.9 per acre.

Further improvements in machinery within the past eight years—including four-row planters and cultivators and general purpose tractors—make it possible now to produce an acre of corn with five hours of labor, says Gray.

How Leaves Generate Heat
In hot, dry climates the friction of the leaves of trees rubbing against one another in a strong wind has generated sufficient heat, it is believed by some scientists, says Collier's Weekly, to have caused forest fires.

A Play Outfit; a Basic Dress

Dress With Bodice Detailing.
Here's a design that brings a breath of fall smartness in the bodice detailing that you'll see in expensive models this coming season. Also in the Victorian sleeves, high at the shoulders and fitted to the arm below. The straight panel in the back, the gathers at the waistline in front, give you a lovely figure-line. Although it's so distinguished looking and subtly detailed, this dress is easy to make. Just six steps in the detailed sew chart. Make it now of silk crepe, linen or georgette. Later in sheer wool, satin or velvet.

The Patterns.
1557 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 14 requires 5½ yards of 35-inch material. 10 yards of ricrac braid to trim.

1482 is designed for sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44. Size 34 requires 4½ yards of 39-inch material with long sleeves; 4¼ yards of 39-inch material for short sleeves.

BATTLE AT McDONALD'S FARM

HOW four youthful Chicago criminals started out to give Canada a few thrills by staging a cross-country crime wage, and how these conceited young punks finished up as riddled corpses inside of two weeks, makes one of the best police stories in years. They had had such a long and uninterrupted career in their old home town that they thought that criminal freedom was plentiful everywhere else. Equipped with pistols and ammunition, several bottles of hair oil, a few shirts, and a fine big shiny automobile that had a powerful engine under its hood, the squad set out for the Dominion. Sneaking into Saskatchewan unobserved, the first act was to get the right sort of license plates. This done, and traveling mostly at night, they headed northward and were soon in the heart of the prairie country.

Here their projected crime wave was held up a bit, for they took in too much alkali water and were quite ill for several days. Two of them almost died, it was later learned. However, a day or so later they were in the west central part of the province and had "holed up" to get their bearings and to see what could be done thereabouts in the way of pulling a profitable job. They finally discovered something that looked promising and sat down to do a bit of planning.

Meanwhile, a lone member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police was fighting his way along a slippery buffalo trail in an old crate of a car that happened to be one of the three in the whole region. And, as he side-slipped and lurched along, he saw the dim lights of oil lamps burning in the homestead cabins of the Smiths, the Joneses, and the Browns.

Further on a bit he would pass the MacDonald homestead in which was kept the only safe and strong box in all the vast prairie territory. Hector MacDonald, which isn't his real name, of course, was a polished, cultured gentleman in whom scores of outlying settlers placed full and complete trust to the extent that they deposited their valuables, without charge, in the great big old-fashioned safe. And, as the lone Man of the Mounted passed, he noticed the MacDonald home in total darkness and decided to investigate.

Moving cautiously over to the homesteader's cottage, he peeked into a window to discover four men hovering over and about the great big safe. Two were standing upright, holding flashlights, and the other two were busy with the knob and dial. As the Mounted Policeman backed away from the window, however, one of the two flashlight-holders spotted him and at once fired a bullet at his head. Being an old timer, he had a bag of tricks ready at hand, so he crumpled up, dropped to the ground, and lay still. Out came the safecrackers, and a moment later they were standing around the body of the dead Mountie. That is, three of them were, for their expert was still working on the safe.

"Well, dat's one of 'em outa der way, by cripes," said one.

"Y-e-a-h . . . We'll rub 'em out like dis as we go along," said another. "No we won't do nuttin' of der kind," spoke the third. "We'll do no killin' less'n we hev ter. They hang fer a killin' up here. Tain't like ol' Chi, an' there ain't no 'Snorky' up here ter help y'out of a jam." Meanwhile the lad inside worked feverishly but unsuccessfully on the safe, and the three began discussing ways and means of hiding the policeman's body. And then when the crooks were absolutely off guard the lone Man of the Mounted moved ever so carefully until his gun hand was in the clear. In that split-second, the crooks saw him moving, and pulled their guns. Two of them fired point blank, but the Man of the Mounted was faster, in spite of the fact that he was the last to draw. He fired three times, and hit each one of the three in the forehead. The safecracker inside, knowing that their plans had gone haywire, lit out through the east door and disappeared into the Saskatchewan gloom.

Leaving the dead where they lay, the lone Man of the Mounted set out after the fourth, and after hours of searching, finally gave it up. A few days later, the safe-cracker, cornered by another Man of the Mounted, tried to shoot his way out, and lost. The Man of the Mounted fired once, while the safe-cracker fired four times, and died. No one can say they didn't get a "break," for the Men of the Mounted draw their weapons only after the criminal has drawn his. At any rate, these poor, misguided lads had been on Canadian soil less than a fortnight and were now dead.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH

"Freedom of the press may protect criticism and agitation for modification or repeal of laws, but it does not extend to protection of him who counsels and encourages the violation of the law as it exists. The Constitution was adopted to preserve our government, not to serve as a protecting screen for those who, while claiming its privileges, seek to destroy it."—Supreme Court of the United States, in Milwaukee Publishing Company v. Anna Rose Block aged 5 is staying on for awhile and expects to return home by train.

The Tinley Park R. N. A., held their social meeting, August 9th with a good attendance despite the hot weather. The serving committee were as follows: Pauline Snyder, chairman, Gladys Reader, Frances Rowden, and Lulu Rogers. For refreshments, ice cream in cups with a variety of cookies was served.

Miss Elsie Jagla is spending a week with friends in Lake Geneva, Wisconsin.

Edward O'Neill who has been seriously ill with pneumonia in the Ingalls hospital in Harvey, is reported to be improving.

The village board will hold their regular monthly meeting August 27th.

A private basket picnic will be held in the Saenger hall grove a week from this Sunday. The Blue Island Eagle picnic held in this grove last Sunday was well attended. The local fire men held their regular fire drill Wednesday night.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Nielsen, son Paul and Miss Ruth Freitag are enjoying their vacation in Michigan.

Misses Alma Siemsen and Berneta Wannemacher are spending a week's vacation in Wisconsin.

A carload of cinders has been unloaded for use at the local mushroom plant.

Mr. and Mrs. James English have gone on a vacation trip and to visit with relatives in Kentucky.

The Wesley Bennett family are entertaining guests from Tennessee. All of the members of the Tinley Park public school faculty have been re-engaged for the coming school year.

The W. B. A. Review of Tinley Park will hold its next business meeting at the school hall Thursday, Aug. 11th. The raffle on the chenille bed spread was not held last meeting because some of the members were unable to return their raffle slips. But the drawing will be held at the present meeting.

The ladies of the Review are having a picnic for all the immediate families of all its members, to be held Aug. 14th at Tinley Grove. At the last meeting, three tables of buncos, and one table of pinochle were played. Our president Mrs. Johnston winning first prize at pinochle, Mrs. Sussex taking another prize.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Bartlett and family attended a picnic at Bass Lake last Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. O. B. Mills of Milwaukee and Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Emile of Chicago were guests in the R. M. Johnston home last Sunday.

Edward O'Neill has been seriously ill with pneumonia in the Harvey hospital for several weeks. It is reported that he has passed the crisis and is improving.

Last Sunday the Tinley Park Boy Scouts, Troop No. 53 marched in a dress parade. This event was sponsored by the Legionnaires in connection with the carnival at Orland Park.

The Civic club has recently given a generous donation to the scouts for which the Scoutmaster is most grateful to know that this organization is backing and recognizing the importance of this work.

Mr. R. Meyers has been seen quite a bit lately at the Henke farm, southeast of Tinley. We wonder why?

Russell Gunn has been visiting in Southern Illinois for several weeks.

Production Credit Ass'n Election

R. O. Mather of Plainfield, president of the Joliet Production Credit Association has announced the election of Ward L. Edwards as Secretary-treasurer of that organization.

In making the announcement, Mr. Mather said: "Mr. Edwards has been selected by the board of directors of the association because of his outstanding work as secretary-treasurer of the Bellville, Illinois Production Credit Association. During his two years with that association the membership and business more than doubled. He is well acquainted with the credit problems of dairy feeders in the Chicago milk shed, having been reared on a dairy farm in Lake County." Edwards is a graduate of the College of Agriculture, University of Illinois. He succeeds J. Franklin Hedgecock who resigned to devote full time to his duties as secretary-treasurer of the Will County National Farm Loan Association, and to the sale of farm lands.

The Joliet Production Credit Association operates in Will, Kendall Grundy and Kankakee counties, Illinois and has 515 farmer-members. These farmers own more than $21,000 in voting stock in the association.

Although most of the association's members are dairymen, loans also have been made to finance feeder cattle and lambs, as well as breeding herds, the production of crops, the purchase of farm machinery and equipment and improvement of farm buildings.

Bringing the News

DOWN to SIZE

BIG NEWS STORIES often keep alive for weeks or months until readers are confused or overwhelmed by the mass of printed detail. Occasionally readers fail to grasp the true aspects of such a story when it comes to a head, because they missed the earlier developments. Typical news of this sort were the Hauptmann case before it came to trial; the Italo-Ethiopian fracas; Philippine independence and old-age security legislation.

WILLIAM C. UTLEY, whose syndicated articles appear regularly in this newspaper, analyzes each case of this kind. In a single story he presents all the facts that are essential to enable the reader to conclude for himself what the outcome should be. He covers sport as well as government, business as well as every-day life. You'll find his work anything but dull—it will often give you a chuckle.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Spirit" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, August 7.

The Golden Text was, "The fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness and righteousness and truth" (Ephesians 5:9).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "O Lord, thou hast searched me, and known me. Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; Even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me" (Psalms 139: 1, 7-10).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "The Scriptures imply that God is All-in-all. From this it follows that nothing possesses reality nor existence except the divine Mind and His ideas. The Scriptures also declare that God is Spirit. He fills all space, and it is impossible to conceive of such omnipresence and individuality except as infinite Spirit or Mind. Hence all is Spirit and spiritual" (p. 331).

Illinois Women Organize To Fight Hidden Taxes

A new consumer movement among women to combat "taxes that increase the cost of living" was moving ahead in the state of Illinois today according to Mrs. Victor C. Reynolds of 621 Atlantic Avenue, Peoria, Ill., who is past president of the American Legion Auxiliary, and is chairman of the Peoria Unit.

As plans went forward there, Mrs. Reynolds called upon consumers throughout the state to join in "the crusade to protect our family budgets" from taxes that undermine them.

"Studies show that taxes—two-thirds of them hidden to the consumer who pays them—absorb more than 25 cents from the earned dollar of income of everyone in the country," Mrs. Reynolds said.

"These hidden taxes are passed on to the consumer as part of the purchase prices of everything we buy. They increase the prices of our food, our clothing, our transportation, our housing.

"They make our consumer dollars bring us either less quantity or poorer quality.

"It is time we consumers united to stop these unseen taxes on purses and pocketbooks. We must bring taxes into the open so that we all know what we are paying and when we are paying them."

In addition to the Peoria group, women in other communities in Illinois are becoming interested in the movement and have made plans to set up units, Mrs. Reynolds said.

Similar units also are forming in Ohio, Minnesota, Michigan and other states. Each group in the various communities will enroll members and conduct tax studies in the effort to make their neighbors tax-conscious and to stop "this increasing hidden tax threat to our standard of living", Mrs. Reynolds stated.

Drivers' License And Financial Responsibility

Secretary of State, Edward J. Hughes, announced ready for distribution a supplementary pamphlet to the Motor Vehicle Laws containing the newly enacted Drivers' License and Financial Responsibility Laws.

Secretary Hughes stressed the fact that while the deadline for securing a Driver's License is May 1, 1939, the requirements of the Financial Responsibility act are in effect now.

Under the regulations of the Financial Responsibility law, any driver involved in an accident when final judgment is given against him in a court of competent jurisdiction must supply the Secretary of State with proof of his ability to pay the judgment. In the event that the driver fails to supply such proof his registration card and license plates must be surrendered to the Secretary of State until such time that the driver is able to give proof of financial responsibility.

Summary of Financial Responsibility Law: How proof of Financial Responsibility may be given.

1. By filing with the Secretary of State written certificate of any insurance carrier authorized to do business in this state, certifying that it has furnished to the operator a motor vehicle liability policy.

2. By filing with the Secretary of State a surety bond, or by a bond signed by two individual sureties each owning real estate having an equity therein in the amount of such bond.

3. By delivering to the Secretary of State a receipt of the State Treasurer showing he deposit with said State Treasurer of money in amount, or securities endorsed in blank by the owner thereof and of a market value of the total amount as would be required if a motor vehicle liability policy were furnished.

What is considered satisfaction of claim under Financial Responsibility act.

1. $5,000 credited upon a judgment rendered in excess of that amount for bodily injury or death to one person.

2. $10,000 credited upon a judgment rendered in excess of that amount for bodily injury or death to two people.

3. $1,000 damages to property.

When proof of Financial Responsibility is required.

1. For those persons who have had their driver's license revoked.

2. For those persons who have had judgments rendered against them in automobile accident cases and have not settled such judgment or made arrangement for settlement within thirty days after they have become final.

Tower Enhances View

From this tower, located at the end of the most beautiful drive on the south rim of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, can be seen in all its glory, the Painted Desert, Coconino Plateau, Hopi and Navajo Indian country, and in the distance San Francisco peaks, highest mountains in Arizona.

The Watchtower at Desert View, on the South Rim of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, is a faithful recreation of the lookout stations or towers erected by the ancient inhabitants of the Southwest many centuries ago.

Constructed of native stones on the brink of the chasm, the Watchtower rises from a huge foundation of green-stained Canyon boulders. At its base is a low round Kiva, a reproduction of the ancient ceremonial chambers or temple of the Pueblo Indians.

On the walls of the Kiva and at each level on the ascent to the tower are a number of actual specimens of Indian pictographs—drawings and carvings, many centuries old.

From the top of the Watchtower, the view embraces vast expanses of the Grand Canyon, the Painted Desert and the Kaibab National Forest.

Bright Angel and Kaibab trails built by government engineers permit a closer study of the Canyon walls and of the story of centuries of erosion which is recounted daily by Government geologists at the observatory near Yavapai Point. Sure-footed saddle mules carry one safely over the trails while motor coaches cruise leisurely along the rim drives.

Protection For The Jobless

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

In Washington, as this is written, a Senatorial Committee is investigating charges, from various sources, that certain attempts have been made to inject politics into the distribution of funds intended to help the jobless and unfortunate.

In several states, members of Congress have announced their intentions to offer or support at the next session rigid legislation directed against some of the practices that have been reported.

Behind these efforts to probe the charges should rally the strong support of all the people. They have a right to know the facts. For if public funds and public sympathy are misused, the practice can hurt everyone. It can injure not only the helpless poor, who need protection, but also the employed workers and earners who, in the last analysis, pay the bills.

The American people are glad to extend cheerful aid to their less fortunate brothers, but they want that aid to be one hundred per cent impartial, one hundred per cent efficient.

In the administration of assistance they want a dollar's worth of help to the jobless for every dollar of public funds devoted to that cause. They want their money's worth—not for themselves but for the unfortunate.

They want such help to be free of political pressure, whatever its source, whatever its faction, whatever its party.

If political consideration creeps into public aid, it affronts the whole ideal of justice, democracy and cooperation to which America is dedicated. But it does more than that.

It mocks, as well, the noblest sentiment of humanity—a spirit of sympathy and compassion for those who suffer misfortune and despair.

Bugle Calls

By Zeb Potter

Let us look back one hundred and fifty-five years in the history of our country to compare government then, with the government we have in Washington.

In 1783 Americans were freed from England by the treaty of Paris. It was "hands off" us as far as Great Britain was concerned. There were thirteen states independent of each other and not at all happy with each other. The job at hand was to weave them together into a picture with some degree of harmony in it. The Articles of Confederation was an attempt on paper to do this job of weaving. To pass important measures, the consent of nine states was necessary. For amendment of the articles, the consent of all the state legislatures was required. So you can readily see that central government at that time was merely a creature of the states.

Powers of congress, well congress couldn't kick up the fuss then, that it can now. Its strength was related to war. It could not gather customs duties or regulate commerce. For operating cash it appealed to the states. Some of the states were "short on the book" in paying Uncle Sam. The central government was weak because congress was weak, and congress could not assign powers to the executive. The states were in the saddle.

Let's take a look at the picture today. We have federal boards regulating aviation, steamboats, meat packing, the stock exchange, and labor relations, and a thousand and one other activities. Mind you these set-ups take their orders from Washington. Their powers are derived from the constitution.

Now maybe this is all for the best but the fact is that we have swung over from a strong local government rule to a strong centralized control at Washington.

One of the weaknesses that I see in the set-up is the fellow who sits at the desk in Washington attempting to solve the problems of the citizens of Mokena, Tinley Park, and Orland Park on a piece of paper.

My plea in preparing this argument is that the local citizens should again take an active and vital interest in local affairs, and not let the experts in Washington have all the say-so. Your intelligent citizen in your local community who has pride and interest in his town, to my mind is the important factor, and is more effective in some respects than the paid expert 1,500 miles away.

I believe that if we had some of that good old New England town meeting spirit of 150 years ago we would be better off in the handling of our local affairs.

At Washington the pressure groups are always active. The liquor crowd, and the sugar group, all have their lobbyists to grind their axes for them. But how about the little fellow who has fought to pay taxes, maintain a home, raise a family, and be a decent law abiding citizen? He has a right to shout about a few things rather than sit back and let a paid expert tell him how to think. As Abraham Lincoln said, "God Bless the common people there are so many of them."

When our work, like hers, is done.
'Tis then we yield with gladness,
Our mother to Him to keep,
And rejoice in the sweet assurance,
"He giveth His loved one sleep."

The Burden On Those Who Toil

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

"Those who toil are the people who will have to foot the bill in the end, no matter on whom it first falls."

This statement is from a series of resolutions adopted some months ago by a group of home-owners who had met to urge balanced budgets and economy in government. Today it adds a significant note to the revised budget estimate recently published at Washington, prophesying a deficit of almost four billion dollars for the present fiscal year.

For, as the estimate shows, the federal government has not only been deep in the red since 1931, but threatens to go still deeper. And on those who toil — the worker who sees the costs of living rise while income sags, the housewife who tries to provide balanced meals on an unbalanced budget — must fall the burden of making up this deficit.

Obviously, as experience has proved, the method of easing their burden is not through greater debts and greater borrowings and greater rises in the cost of living which such programs entail. Rather, as experience again has proved, it is through the encouragement of increased production, and the building up of confidence on which that production depends.

The epic of progress in America has been a history of confidence translated into action. It was on this framework, bolstered by the virtues of thrift, self-reliance and constructive labor, that we built the greatest, as well as the freest nation the world has ever known. It is on this framework that our progress will continue.

Plans to increase the burdens of deficit and debt now charged against America's workers do not point the clear path to future prosperity. They point, instead, the gloomy way to heavier loads on the shoulders of those who toil.

"See America First"

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Countless Americans, as this is written, are either planning or embarked upon their annual program of nationwide summer travel.

This is an excellent thing. It has particular value at a time when discouragement and pessimism flood so much of the world. For America, seen and understood as a whole, has an inspiring message to impart.

To all who view it with open eyes and open mind, America offers not only grandeur of scenery, but a record of grandeur of character on the part of its builders as well.

In the fertile farms of the Mississippi Valley, in the productive industries of the East, in the spreading ranches of the great West, it dramatizes the story of the men who, by their own strength, their own energy, their own spontaneous and creative courage, harnessed the power of a continent to build a free and mighty nation.

Everywhere the tourists will see the America which was made by the labor and thrift, the enterprise and the energy of our pioneers and those who followed them.

Everywhere they will see what can and has been achieved by the unshackled spirit of a people who demanded only opportunity and independence.

What a pity the oppressed peoples of Europe—who are taught that in order to advance, men must be the instruments and the dependents of the State—cannot see these things!

What a pity the theorists who urge on our people a policy of leaning upon government and looking to the politicians rather than to their own abilities for help and direction, will not understand America's message!

To all who really see America it tells the inspiring story of what can be achieved by the free spirit of a great people unshackled by dictatorial repression.

And dictators, or their admirers, who preach that progress depends on the goose step of regimentation, or blind dependence on bureaucratic power, should relinquish the reins of authority for the steering wheel of an open roadster, and See America First.

Three large tank trucks and trailers haul the milk supply to Chicago where it is bottled.

When the milk is received at the Orland Park it is cooled down to 34 degrees and placed in insulated tanks for transportation to Chicago.

Milk is hauled to the Orland plant from many miles around, the longest haul being from Gardner, Ill., 60 miles southwest of Orland Park. Some milk is also received from Wilmington.

At the village board meeting held Monday night J. F. Schmaderke was given the order to write a blanket insurance policy for the fire department and A. J. Toelle was given the order to write the insurance on the fire truck.

ORLAND 7; PALOS 1

The Orland Park A. C. baseball team travelled to Palos Park Sunday and defeated Palos by the score of 7 to 1. It was Orland's ninth victory of the year against one defeat, and put Orland in sole possession of first place as Worth defeated Oak Lawn in a ninth inning rally.

It was "Pat" Homerding on the mound for Orland as he set Palos down with six scattered hits. "Pat" walked but one man and struck out 5. Morgenthaler pitched for Palos and walked 5 men while striking out 11.

Orland had one big inning in the game when they scored 5 runs in the second to put the game on ice.

E. Uthe, Orland's great first baseman was the only Orland man to get 2 hits off of Morgenthaler. Kelly Mahaffey got three hits off Homerding to lead both teams at bat.

Orland made some very fine fielding plays which brought great rounds of applause from the spectators.

Next Sunday Orland will be host to their chief rivals, Oak Lawn. Orland will be out for revenge as it was Oak Lawn who gave Orland its only defeat of the current season. Game will start at 2:30 p. m., and everybody is invited out to witness one of the best games of the year.

Nature of Competition Vastly Changed From Former Days

Development of New Products and Raw Materials Added to Price Rivalry

Washington—Are our "giant" corporations holding down living standards by holding up prices, in an effort to make exorbitant profits? Has competition declined so that the production and distribution of goods needed for higher living standards is being hindered?

A study which has just been completed at the Brookings Institution found that competition is as real as in former days—perhaps more real. But

War have sought to effect economies and promote efficiency, the study found. This is in contrast to the aim of combinations of a generation ago, which was chiefly to control markets, suppress competition and raise prices. Some of these older combinations were able to hold up prices for a time, but eventually such attempts broke down or aroused so much resentment that the combinations were dissolved by governmental actions.

These charts indicate in general how living standards have risen since 1870, during which years there have occurred the greatest development of machine production and the growth of large corporations. The upper chart shows that, although the wholesale prices of manufactured goods were about 9 per cent lower in 1937 than in 1870, the weekly wage had increased more than 150 per cent. The lower chart shows how much a worker could purchase with his weekly wage, assuming that retail prices kept in step with wholesale figures; in 1937 it was nearly three times as much as in 1870. This increase came in spite of the fact that the length of the working week was reduced by approximately one-third during this period.

It operates in a different way. Manufacturers today compete not only in the pricing of their products, but also in the development of new products and new uses for raw materials. The result may be even more useful to the people as a whole than in the days when the prices of nearly all goods were fixed by direct bargaining in the market.

The making of prices over a large part of industry is vastly changed from what it used to be. The producer estimates in advance a price at which an article can be bought by an expanding number of people and then finds a way to turn out a product within that price.

Almost everyone is aware that this is the way automobile prices are set, and the study found that the three largest concerns in this industry have set the high water mark of competition thus far.

Today, it is almost impossible for so-called monopolies to keep prices unduly high in order to make big profits. Advances in physics, chemistry, and engineering have been so great in recent years that, whenever a corporation tries to do this, some one comes along with a satisfactory substitute at a lower price.

Previous studies made at the Brookings Institution indicated that the best method of passing on to the public the benefits of improved productive efficiency is by giving the consumer lower prices.

Policies of Many Corporations Are Examined

In the latest study, entitled "Industrial Price Policies and Economic Progress," specific inquiries were made into the policies of many manufacturing concerns to find out whether they were aimed in this direction. The study was made by Dr. Edwin G. Nourse, director of economic research, and Dr. Horace B. Drury, a member of the staff. It was financed under a grant by the Maurice and Laura Falk Foundation of Pittsburgh.

Big corporations since the World

The study did not find that the percentage of the nation's business done by "giant" corporations has been increasing. Production by such large enterprises comprises about 40 per cent of the total, which is about the same percentage as obtained a generation ago.

Big and Little Companies Work Together

The study shows how big and little companies work together to the advantage of both. Large corporations are generally able to spend more freely to maintain competent technical and management staffs, and these companies have usually been in the front of price reduction.

But smaller concerns also benefit from this large-scale production. With larger concerns purchasing their supplies in large quantities and planning production far in advance, smaller companies which sell them supplies and raw materials are in turn able to plan production on the most economical basis. Many small concerns also find it easier to borrow money from local banks and other sources when they have contracts with large corporations.

Operation of industrial enterprises at their practical capacity is necessary if the nation is to have maximum production of goods, the report of the study says. Forward-looking price policies, constantly aiming toward giving the consumer more for his money, were found to be the most important factor in bringing about capacity operation.

The high level of employment which would come with such capacity operation would have far greater effect in raising living standards than any employment which the government could provide.

Since 1870, while our large corporations have been developing, the amount of manufactured goods which the average worker's weekly wage would buy was multiplied by two and a half. At the same time, the working week was reduced by about one-third.

MIXTURE OF RELIEF CASH
AND POLITICS DANGEROUSCandidates' Methods of Influencing Voters Scored by Washington Observer; Suggests Return to Election of Senators by Legislatures

By WILLIAM BRUCKART

WNU Service, National Press Bldg., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON. — I had finished reading my evening paper a few nights ago when I found myself quite down in the dumps. The news of the day was disturbing. It was vicious news in its implications. There was so much of it that was disturbing that I could not help wondering where we, as a people, are headed.

On page one, there was an account of the bitter factional fight within the Democratic ranks in Tennessee. Sen. George Berry was seeking re-election—rather, renomination—and Senator McKellar, his colleague, was fighting tooth and nail to prevent it. Party control in the state was the objective, and

And then, rather in disgust with the whole thing, I turned to a new book. The volume is titled "Notable Virginia Bar Addresses."

Among the 27 speeches listed there, I decided to read that by the late Thomas R. Marshall. His address, like all of the others, was intended to preach good government and the obligations of the lawyer as well as the layman. In reading that speech, I came across this passage:

"I have only one apology that I know of to make for my political life. I apologize to the American people for having been in favor of the election of United States senators by the people. My reason for it was different from the reason of many men. I had gotten tired of voting for some old rum-nosed Democrat for the legislature in Indiana because a United States senator depended on him for election; and I thought that I could raise the grade of legislators in Indiana by letting the people elect the United States senators. Now, it was an altruistic movement to make that change in the organic law of the United States; but, ladies and gentlemen, when it has resulted in the spending of half a million dollars to elect a senator, I want to know if the old fashioned government would not have been better."

Answer to Today's Problem
Given in 1920

And right there, I believe, is the guts of the present day problem. Mr. Marshall had held many elective offices and the speech from which I quoted the above passage was made while he was vice president of the United States. He was an observer and a student of politics. He saw in 1920 where we, as a people, were going and I have no doubt that he could have predicted exactly the set of circumstances we are meeting now.

When Senator Norris of Nebraska, once a Republican, then a Democrat, and now labeled as something else, drove the constitutional amendment through congress and cleared the way for direct election of United States senators, he accomplished two things. (1) He made it possible for the purest type of demagogue to win elections by his ability to "promise" more than the opposition, rewards, political patronage, pork barrel returns to the state and (2) he assured that vast sums of money can—indeed, must be—used to influence elections. And, in amplification of the second item, he made it possible for any administration, any dominant party, in control of the federal government to build up national and state machines jointly by using federal money.

Too Many Senators Out for
Greatest Amount of Swag

I grant that corporations, "vested interests," formerly had too much to say about the election of United States senators by state legislatures. But of the two, I have come to the conclusion that we had a better national administration and particularly a better senate under that condition than under the system where every voter casts a ballot directly for a United States senatorial nominee. That is why 75 per cent of the present senate members are nothing more or less than salesmen who are trying to collect for their states the greatest amount of swag which they can put over with their brother senators. That is why, too, day after day, we have watched cliques formed and trading done over legislation in the senate. The senators either are trying to make good on demagogic promises or they are building a storehouse to be used in the next campaign.

Senator Norris may have thought he was performing a great service to the American people and he may have felt that he was building a monument for his name, but I am firmly convinced he did quite the contrary. For, be it known, were it not for Mr. Norris' monumental amendment to the Constitution of the United States there could hardly be such an outrage committed as that by Mr. Hopkins. It must be remembered that Mr. Hopkins never was elected; he is an appointee of the President of the United States and is responsible to him alone. So when Mr. Hopkins flirts with a state electorate, there can be no other interpretation placed upon his action than that he is using the influence available as a result of his dictatorship over relief distribution.

It all depends, of course, upon how one views the functions and purposes of the United States senate. If one wants the senate to be just a glorified house of representatives, able to maintain itself solely on what pap it is able to lay in the laps of voters—then, we ought to keep the present system. If, however, one believes as I do that the senate is comprised, or should be, of senators of the United States instead of senators of a state variety unconcerned with the Union of states, then there could well be repeal of the amendment.

Marshall's Apology

Thomas R. Marshall, Vice President of the United States in the Wilson administration, once said: "I have only one apology that I know of to make for my political life. I apologize to the American people for having been in favor of the election of United States senators by the people." There, thinks William Bruckart, is the key to today's problem. Let state legislators pick U. S. senators, he says, and we'll be rid of the demagogue who is elected by his ability to promise more than the opposition.

there were countless charges of the use of money, federal relief money, state payroll money, other money.

There was, likewise, a fight going on next door. In Kentucky, Gov. "Happy" Chandler was seeking the Democratic nomination to the senate and Sen. "Dear Alben" Barkley wanted to be renominated and re-elected. Also, the New Dealers in Washington, from President Roosevelt on down wanted Senator Barkley sent back, and the President had gone into Kentucky to tell the voters of his views. Again: money, federal relief money, state payroll money, charges of attempted trades of federal judgeships so that there would not have to be a bitter primary fight like that which came.

Mr. Hopkins' Idea on Relief
Votes Backfires

Here in Washington, there was the greatest spender of all time, Mr. Harry Hopkins, head of the Works Progress administration and professional reliever of destitute persons whether they are politicians or the poor, popping off another idea. Mr. Hopkins was saying that 90 per cent of the relief clients would vote for President Roosevelt for a third term. It was a statement that immediately caused a backfire from Capitol Hill where Senator Sheppard of Texas was saying as chairman of the committee investigating the use of relief money in politics, that there must be something done about such methods of influencing voters.

In another place, I read how Governor Earle of Pennsylvania was calling the state legislature into special session there to enact laws that would prevent a grand jury from investigating some of the governor's acts. The call for the special session had been preceded, of course, by a terrific political fight over the Democratic nomination for United States senator in Pennsylvania, which was won by Governor Earle. The governor preferred to have the investigating done by members of the state legislature, if there was to be an inquiry, rather than by an independent group. The only way to prevent it was by a law taking away the authority of the courts and the grand jury.

There were other states involved, too. Senator McAdoo, who is seeking renomination as the Democratic senatorial candidate in California, was under fire. Some of his campaigners, it was charged, were using coercion as well as federal relief funds, while out in South Dakota opponents of Governor Berry, now the Democratic nominee for the United States senate, were bringing forth a new set of charges. They informed the senate committee here that the Farm Security administration in South Dakota had been sending out a press release that had nice things to say about Governor Berry. The press release was two years old, of course, but the FSA was mailing out many of them to voters—and paying no postage on them. It was another case of using the franking privilege, said the accusers.

Politics Hits New Low With
No Change in Sight

It was enough to make one sick at the stomach; here was politics in a new quagmire, and no signs to indicate that it is not a permanent condition. What, I thought, is going to be the type of men coming in to the United States senate with such background as these stories indicated?

IN UNCLE SAM'S census bureau at Washington America's official nose counters are already preparing for the 1940 population check, a stupendous job that requires intricate equipment, skilled workers. From all corners of the nation come census reports by registered mail. These are sorted, checked, edited, and finally translated into figures on the card puncher below.

Information compiled each 10 years by the U. S. census bureau finds its way into thousands of hands and is used for thousands of constructive purposes. The bureau provides Uncle Sam's only method of discovering what his people are doing, and of uncovering the popular trends of the times. More frequent "nose counts" have often been proposed.

Here is a "gang puncher" which records identical information on any given group of punch cards, such as states, cities, kinds of businesses, etc. Later cards are run through an electrical tabulator which adds figures for final publication. Below: Uncle Sam stores census records with micro-films. Each page of the report is photographed in miniature and filed, later "blown-up" again.

Lesson for August 14

THE RELATION OF TEMPER-
ANCE TO CHARACTER

LESSON TEXT—Proverbs 4:10-23; 1 Thessalonians 5:6-8.
GOLDEN TEXT—Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging: and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.—Proverbs 20:1.

PRIMARY TOPIC—What a Wise Man Said.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Wise Man's Way.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How the Use of Liquor Affects Character.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How the Use of Liquor Affects Character.

Childhood remembrances are commonly sweet and precious—but some of them are vivid on the pages of memory because they relate to dangerous and distressing things. Among the things decent people avoided like the pestilence when the writer was a boy was the saloon. To be seen entering such places was to mark one's character, and to be a frequenter of them was to be lost to all that was good and holy.

High sounding and very pious were the assurances that when prohibition was repealed we would never see the return of the saloon, but we have them in multiplied number, and with a shameless appeal to women as well as men, to our growing girls and boys as well as to adults. Clever advertising has sought to make it "smart" to drink, and "manly" to be able to "carry" liquor. It is for that reason that it is of the utmost importance that we develop strong and intelligent character in our boys and girls—so that they may not only appraise the vicious "booze business" for what it really is, but also have the strength of character to fight it, not only for themselves, but for their weaker brother. They should know and proclaim that the saloon, whether it be called an "inn" or a "tavern," is always a "bar"—"A bar to Heaven, a door to Hell; Whoever named it named it well."

I. Developing Strength of Character (Prov. 4:10-23).

Solomon, the writer of many of the Proverbs, constantly stressed the importance of gaining wisdom. A man may be a perfect encyclopedia of information and yet may lack the wisdom to apply that knowledge to life. Dr. Hight C. Moore, in Points for Emphasis, provides a most helpful outline of this portion of Proverbs 4, which will assist the reader and teacher. He suggests that we must (1) "accept the challenge of a worthy goal, v. 10," by listening as a son to a father to the words which shall give us a long and happy life. Then we must (2) "follow the way of wisdom, vv. 11-13." It is a way that has been tested by those who have preceded us, and they have found it to be the right way. This will enable us to (3) "avoid the way of the wicked, vv. 14-17." Note the dreadful picture of those who not only do wickedness but delight in leading others into their evil paths, in fact they cannot sleep unless they have misled some poor soul. Shun that path, and (4) "irradiate the path to the larger life, vv. 18, 19." The way to life is a light path "that shineth more and more." The way of the wicked is stumbling and darkness. The devil and his followers are trying to make young people believe just the opposite. Let us teach them the truth that they may (5) "heed every syllable of all the words of God, vv. 20-23." Give attention to God's Word, listen to it, read it, keep it hidden in your heart. The heart in Scripture stands for the very center of man's spiritual being, out of which are all the issues of life. Evil thoughts, unholy desires and ambitions hidden there will ultimately be revealed in overt acts of ungodliness. Even so the Word of God hidden there will bring forth life in all its abundant beauty and strength.

The young man or woman who is thus taught God's Word in the home and the church will have an impregnable defense against the wiles and temptations of the world, the flesh, and the devil.

II. Exhibiting Strength of Character (1 Thess. 5:6-8).

The Lord is coming again! Paul was constantly looking forward to the day of His coming. It was not his lot to live until the Lord came, but he was not mistaken in looking for Him. The Lord has tarried, why only He knows, but it is the judgment of many excellent Bible expositors that the next great event to take place in divine history is His return. What a glorious hope!

But while we await His coming we are not to sleep as those round about us. Watchfulness, sobriety of life, these become the Christian. Certainly nothing of the drunkenness of our day is to enter into the life of the Christian. He who belongs to Christ does not drink of the devil's "fire-water." But far more than that is in mind here, for the Christian is to go on in faith, love, and hope until he becomes "on fire" for God, burning with the passion of the Holy Spirit, not only for his own life, but for the salvation of the lost and for the development of true Christian character in those who have taken upon themselves the beautiful name of "Christian."

A Way With Dogs

The old theory that a man can be trusted if dogs like him, and is to be distrusted if dogs dislike him, is pure nonsense. Some people have a way with dogs, and can get along with most of them; others never get along with dogs. Moral character has nothing to do with the matter, for some of the worst scoundrels that ever lived had devoted dogs. Governor Baxter, of Maine, once sent a dog to the state prison, and it promptly made friends with the prisoners regardless of their past records.

Why not give it a chance to help YOU? Over one million women have written in reporting wonderful benefits from Pinkham's Compound.

Watch Your Kidneys!Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!

C. Houston Goudiss Analyzes The Cereal Grains

Well Known Food Authority Describes Their Place in the Diet

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS
6 East 39th Street, New York City.

TO ME, there is no more inspiring sight in the world than a field of nodding golden grain. It not only pleases the eye with its grace and profound beauty, but it attests to Nature's bounty. For down through the ages, grains have sustained and comforted man.

In every quarter of the globe, foods made from grain constitute the largest single item in the food supply. This is as it should be, for no other foodstuff affords such a rich store of fuel value at such little cost. It has been estimated that during one day's labor, an American farmer, growing wheat by up-to-date American methods, can produce enough protein and calories to sustain a man for a year.

A Source of Power and Pep

Every nation depends upon some form of cereal to furnish motive power for the body machinery — to provide necessary energy to keep body and brain functioning efficiently. In the Western world, wheat is supreme. But in Oriental countries, rice takes the lead and it is the chief article of food for half of the world's people. Rye, oats, barley, maize and buckwheat are likewise important crops.

Energy Values Compared

All uncooked cereal foods show great similarity in their chemical composition and therefore have very nearly the same energy value—that is about 1,650 calories per pound. The weight of a 100-calorie portion is about an ounce. But there is a wide variation in bulk, depending upon the degree to which the cereal has been refined. For example, three tablespoons of patent wheat flour weigh one ounce; one and one-fourth cups of a puffed wheat cereal likewise weigh one ounce. After cooking, there is a big variation in weight, as well as measure, owing to the varying amounts of water absorbed. Thus a cup of cooked oatmeal mush supplies the same number of calories as three tablespoons of a pebbly dry cereal with a nut-like taste.

The Cereal Proteins

From 8 to 12 per cent of the calories in cereal foods are obtained from protein and two noted investigators have estimated that grain products contribute 38 per cent of the total calories and 37 per cent of the protein in the typical American dietary.

Laboratory experiments indicate that the proteins of wheat, oats, maize, rye and barley are about equally efficient in promoting and supporting growth. None of them compares with an equivalent weight of the complete proteins of milk, eggs or meat, but when combined with small amounts of milk, the cereal proteins become highly efficient.

Iron and Copper

The mineral elements of grains are concentrated largely in the outer layers and in the germ. For this reason, there is considerable difference in the yield of minerals from whole grain and highly refined cereal foods.

The mineral content of bran is from 10 to 20 times greater than that of patent flour, and whole wheat contains from three to five times as much iron, calcium and phosphorus. Bran, oatmeal and whole grain cereals are a good source of copper as well as iron.

Rich in Vitamin B

The different cereal grains are quite similar in their vitamin values, but as the vitamins are very unevenly distributed throughout the kernel, there is a wide variation in vitamin content between the whole grain and refined cereal foods.

All seeds, including whole grains, are relatively poor in vitamin A. They are entirely lacking in vitamins C and D and contain only small amounts of vitamin G.

Both the germ and bran, however, are excellent sources of vitamin B—which promotes appetite, aids digestion and helps to prevent a nervous disorder. The importance of the germ as a food has been more fully appreciated since it was discovered that it is at least five times as rich in vitamin B as the whole grain or bran.

There are several cereals on the market containing added wheat germ and this precious substance may also be obtained in concentrated form.

Laxative Value of Cereals

The whole grain cereals contain an abundance of bulk or cellulose and are therefore a valuable aid in promoting normal elimination. Individuals differ in their requirement for foods having a laxative effect, and in some cases one must be guided by personal experience. But inasmuch as the whole grain products furnish the body with larger amounts of minerals and vitamins B and G, a good general rule is to consume at least half of one's bread and other cereal foods in the whole grain form.

Digestibility of Grains

The whole grain products are less completely digested than those which are more highly refined, but as they contain larger amounts of protein, it is estimated that the amount of protein digested and absorbed from an equal weight of entire wheat or patent flours is practically the same. Thus when the two types of flours are considered as sources of protein and energy alone, they are regarded by nutritionists as substantially equivalent and interchangeable.

Many Forms of Cereal Foods

From infancy to old age, the cereal foods should, and usually do constitute the mainstay of the diet. Fortunately, there is such a wide variety from which to choose that there is little likelihood of monotony. Furthermore, because of their bland flavor, one does not readily tire of cereal foods.

In addition to the wide variety of breads, rolls, muffins, biscuits and griddle cakes that can be made from refined and whole grain flours, there are an astonishing number of cooked and uncooked cereals from which to choose. When served with milk, bread or cereals make an ideal and economical food combination.

Macaroni for a Main Dish

Besides serving as the main feature at breakfast and for the child's supper, cereal foods are useful as the chief attraction at dinner or supper when served in the form of macaroni, spaghetti or egg noodles. They are a fine source of energy and also furnish about 12 per cent protein. When combined with cheese, which adds protein, minerals and vitamins, they constitute a balanced main dish.

Cereal products of all kinds deserve a ranking place among FOODS THAT KEEP US FIT.

Questions Answered

Miss R. M.—There is no evidence to indicate any relation between thunderstorms and the souring of milk. Thunderstorms are more likely to occur during the summer when temperatures are high. Hot weather also induces bacterial growth in milk. The only connection between the two is that conditions favoring one also favor the other.

Mrs. J. McK.—Though the food value of meat extracts is low, they have a tempting flavor, due to the presence of the savory extractives which stimulate appetite. Their content of potash salts causes a quickened and stronger heart beat. In fact, it has been said that their effect is more like a stimulant than a food. That is why they are often used as a restorative for invalids.
